

Intercultural Communication From an Interdisciplinary Perspective

Madelyn Flammia, Hosman A. Sadri
University of Central Florida, Florida, USA

The need for effective communication among the people of the world has never been more pressing than it is at the start of the 21st century in this post-9/11 world. Recent breakthroughs in the fields of transportation, computing and telecommunications have combined to increase the ease and frequency of communication among members of different cultures. At the same time, developments in world politics have made the need for meaningful communication among different people a necessity for the survival of everyone on the planet. This paper describes a course that prepares students for global citizenship. The course helps students develop an informed understanding of global challenges and the skills to address those challenges. The paper offers specific teaching strategies and assignments that can be adapted to many disciplines.

Keywords: intercultural communication, global citizenship, mindfulness, international relations

Introduction

In order to be effective, global education must be integrated throughout the curriculum. It takes more than one or two courses on global issues to give students true preparation for their role as global citizens. This paper begins by describing an interdisciplinary course in global citizenship and goes on to suggest ways to adapt the assignments and teaching strategies presented across the disciplines.

Mindful Intercultural Communication

In the interdisciplinary course on global citizenship, we introduce students to a mindful approach to the study of intercultural communication. Mindful communicators approach information about other cultures with an open mind and break free of stereotypical categorizations of members of cultures that are different from their own. They also strive to see the world from different perspectives of other cultures. This approach can go a long way toward decreasing and even preventing unintentional conflict.

The importance of mindfulness in intercultural communication has been thoroughly discussed by Stella Ting-Toomey. In Communicating Across Cultures, she talked about the benefits of being a mindful intercultural communicator which include creating a feeling of "being understood, supported and respected" in the individual(s) with whom we are communicating (Ting-Toomey, 1999). Ting-Toomey's work emphasized the need to go beyond our preconceived notions, to strive to gain knowledge about other cultures and to acquire skills for effective communication and conflict resolution (Ting-Toomey, 1999).

In our course, we define mindful intercultural communication as interactions with members of other
