

This program is a departmental initiative—the value activity is described below.

3. The current system is not a paper-based system; it is a stone-based system. Explain why this is so.

The current system relies on a process that records a stone's status (available, reserved, and sold) for each stone. That is why this can be considered a 'stone-based' system. There is no centralized way of knowing all available stones, all reserved stones, or all sold stones without physically reviewing the stone inventory. To find a given stone's status, the stone must be looked at physically.

- d. Create an enterprise system that uses a shared database. Change the diagram you created in your answer to question 2 to include this database. Assume every slash of stone and every location in the warehouse has a unique identifier. Does the shared database system solve the problems of the stone-based system? Why or why not?
