KEY INFORMATION: The owner complies with Part 11 of the FID Rules. Therefore, it satisfies the following two conditions: (1) The owner may not cause harmful interference and (2) The owner may prevent or, at least, minimize interference with the service of other stations.

These two methods have been used to study the effects of a 12-week high-altitude training camp on the performance of elite athletes. The first method, the 'gold standard', involves the use of a metabolic chamber, which allows the measurement of oxygen consumption and carbon dioxide production. The second method, the 'portable method', involves the use of a portable metabolic analyser, which allows the measurement of oxygen consumption and carbon dioxide production in the field. The results of the study showed that both methods were able to detect a significant increase in oxygen consumption and carbon dioxide production after the training camp. The portable method was found to be a valid and reliable method for measuring oxygen consumption and carbon dioxide production in the field.
