Cardiac Conduction

The heart has the most sophisticated electrical control system and structure actually resides the heart in upper chest. This electrical system is called the cardiac conduction system. It is made up of specialized tissues and cells producing the heart the cardiomyocytes directly to the atria and ventricles, respectively, in the heart's conduction system. The left and right atria contract together first followed by the contraction of the ventricles together.

The cardiac conduction system is composed:

fourteen or thereabout parts:

1. The Sinoatrial Node

Also known as the pacemaker, this node usually generates all cardiac signals originating the electrical impulse that will control the heart's beat.

2. The Atrioventricular Node (AVN) is used to allow for some time difference that cardiomyocytes from the left atria, and continues the electrical signal down into the ventricles.

3. The Purkinje's System

The Heartbeat

The sinoatrial (SA) node begins the contraction by sending an impulse through both atria, leaving them to contract first and the atrioventricular (AV) node. The AV node conducts the impulse, sending it into the bundle of the right atrial bundle branches, and into Purkinje fibers within the ventricles causing both ventricles to contract.

As the impulse moves through the heart, cardiac muscle cells contract, as the cells depolarize. Depolarization is caused by a flood of ions (sodium and potassium) across the cell membranes, which the cells, and therefore cardiac muscle tissue, to contract. Once the impulse has passed, the cardiac cells must wait for a while for cardiomyocyte impulses. This electrical repolarization and allows them the time to rest back through the cell membrane, causing the cardiomyocyte to rest.

The AV node will create a structure from left to right electrical impulses are received. Each atrial impulse causes a ventricular and therefore the (ventricular cells). The electrical impulse causes the heart to depolarize and contract, followed by repolarization and relaxation, at a constant rate. The normal rhythm and rate is called the sinus rhythm. The cardiac conduction system is also responsible for increasing or decreasing the number of cardiomyocyte impulses depending on the amount of oxygen.
