

Lab 20 – Using Microinformatics to Investigate Evolutionary Relationships: More a BLAST!

Introduction:

Genome-wide (GW) genomic studies using international consortia project genomes of the Human Genome Project, now also include and require 20,000 to 25,000 genes that define a human being. This project also systematically mapped the genomes of other species, including the fruit fly, mouse and Drosophila, etc. The project also includes sequencing of the genomes of other animals, plants and microorganisms. Projects are in place to address and map genomes.

Why is this information important? Being able to identify the precise location and sequence of human genes and other genes across different species genomes. In addition, finding other relationships of genes in other species helps us understand evolutionary relationships among organisms. Many of our genes are identical or similar to those found in other species.

Remember your laboratory project that investigated the evolutionary distance to fruit flies. In this case, you have genomic information. Does it make a difference? It should take you nearly 20 years to walk through the entire human genome to try to locate the same amount of genes as that in fruit flies. This technology and progress, and sophisticated technological methods are needed.

Microinformatics is a field that combines statistics, mathematical modeling, and computer-assisted analysis biological data. Using microinformatics methods, entire genomes can be quickly compared to identify evolutionary relationships and differences. An extremely powerful microinformatics tool is BLAST, which stands for Basic Local Alignment Search Tool. Using BLAST, you can input a gene sequence or protein sequence and search for genes that identify it similar sequences in a matter of minutes.

In this investigation, you will use BLAST to compare relationships and phylogenetic information to construct a cladogram, a phylogenetic tree called evolutionary tree, or an evolutionary tree. Phylogenetic tree is a diagrammatic representation of species. Figure 1 below depicts a phylogenetic cladogram.

Note that the cladogram is rooted with Archaeopteryx and leads to birds representing a specific species. The other three taxa species are listed to show that they are evolutionarily close to each other.
