Abstract. The 1990s have been a decade of change for the American health care system. The passage of the Health Insurance Reform Act of 1993, the implementation of the Health Care Financing Administration's (HCFA) new rules for Medicare and Medicaid, and the passage of the Balanced Budget Act of 1995 have all had a significant impact on the health care system. This article discusses the impact of these changes on the health care system and the role of the health care provider.
