Answer:

Two disadvantages associated with database systems are listed below.

- Setup of the database system requires more knowledge, money, skills, and time.
- The complexity of the database may result in poor performance.

1.2

Answer:

- Executing an action in the DBL results in the creation of an object in the database; in contrast, a programming language type declaration is simply an abstraction used in the program.
- Database DBLs allow consistency constraints to be specified, which programming language type systems generally do not allow. These include domain constraints and referential integrity constraints.
- Database DBLs support authorization, giving different access rights to different users. Programming language type systems do not provide such protection (at best, they protect attributes in a class from being accessed by methods in another class).
- Programming language type systems are usually much richer than the SQL type system. Most databases support only basic types such as different types of numbers and strings, although some databases do support some complex types such as arrays and objects.
